CLEAN UP AUSTRALIA, CLEAN UP THE WORLD

Ian Kiernan was taking part in an around-the-world sailing race in 1987 when he noticed an alarming amount of garbage in the oceans. Returning home to Australia, Kiernan felt he had to do something about it.

He started close to home by organizing a community event in 1989 called Clean Up Sydney Harbour. To his surprise, more than 40,000 volunteers came out to clear away garbage. Encouraged by this success, Kiernan decided to make the clean-up a national event the following year. It took off across Australia, an estimated 300,000 people spent the day working to improve their local environment.

Clean Up Australia Day has been held annually since then, growing bigger every year. In 1993, Kiernan started an even more ambitious program. With the help of the United Nations Environment Programme, he launched Clean Up The World to support communities around the world in cleaning up and conserving the environment. In its first year, more than 30 million people in 80 countries participated. Clean Up The World now falls on the third weekend of September every year, and has grown more popular as the years go by.

Today, Clean Up Australia Day welcomes more than half a million volunteers who help to clear thousands of tons of garbage from beaches, parks, streets, and waterways. They pick up used cigarettes, glass and plastic bottles, plastic bags, and thousands of snack food wrappers.

In recent years, Kiernan says that there has been an increase in harmful electronic waste, such as computers and cell phones, and that e-waste is accumulating faster than other trash. E-waste sometimes makes up 70 percent of the overall waste found in landfills, according to Global Futures Foundation. Kiernan feels that companies need to take more responsibility for the clean-up and recycling of their products, since chemicals from e-waste can cause health problems if they leak into the ground or into the water supply. To help deal with e-waste, Kiernan started a program called Clean Up Mobile Phones to collect used cell phones for reuse and recycling.

Kiernan saw a problem that needed fixing, and he chose to take action. By starting Clean Up Australia Day, he raised awareness of how we treat our Earth. What's more, he united millions of people in their goal to make the world a cleaner place. Through persistence and hard work, Kiernan has shown that anyone who puts their minds to it can make a difference.
